FOREWORD

An index is to historical material what an inventory is to a stock of goods — an itemized catalogue systematically arranged to help you find what you want without too much hunting about. The user of the index, even as the user of the inventory, however, is entitled to a brief explanation of the method of arrangement.

The decennial Cumulative Index to the MISSISSIPPI VALLEY HISTORICAL REVIEW embraces materials in the forty issues beginning June, 1929, and ending March, 1939 (Volumes XVI-XXVI). Titles of articles published in the REVIEW and papers presented at meetings of the Association are indicated in quotation marks. For the latter the identification "paper" follows the title. Items which appeared as papers and also in printed form are indicated by the words "paper" and "printed." Articles are indexed under titles, under authors, under the more important proper names discussed in the body of the article, and, in detail, under various subject entries. Papers, too, are indexed under subject in so far as the annual reports of the meetings supplied data for such indexing.

Titles of books reviewed are indexed in complete form under the title entry and with a slightly abbreviated title under the author entry. In both instances there is the explanatory abbreviation "revd." following the title. Under the series title or series editor entry no title or author of a specific volume is mentioned but, whenever possible, the volume number is mentioned; here, too, the abbreviation "revd.," follows. Under the reviewer entry the author and title are omitted and only the abbreviation "rev." for a single review or "revs." for more than one review is indicated; this is followed by the proper volume and page numbers. Book reviews are also indexed under subject entries. Material in the Historical News and Comments Sections, with the exceptions of the lists of periodicals and personal items, has been indexed. Brief notices of books in this section are treated as if they were book reviews but the term "noted" is employed in such cases. For biographies the family name of the biographer is supplied, e.g., Madison, James, Smith biog., XXV, 93-94; Burns biog., 404-405.

Because of the bulk of the material a rather drastic system of abbreviation had to be adopted. This, however, was worked out to agree in most cases with the latest edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary. Where abbreviations differ from this authority it is because they have been elaborated or altered to avoid confusion.[1] Consistency has been an aim in the abbreviations. The volumes of the REVIEW are indicated in bold type to differentiate these from the volumes of particular works mentioned. Foreign titles of nobility (with a few exceptions) and pseudonyms are cross-referenced and are indexed under the original family name with the title or pseudonym following in parenthesis. In general, the practice in this index has been to use but a limited number of cross-references. Additional references (see also), however, have been suggested at the conclusions of a number of subject entries. Changes in the spelling of proper names, whether family or given, are indicated by a parenthetical form of the variation. Diligent search was made to supply the given name in full under the name entry wherever possible. In some cases this could not be done and in three instances even initials could not be discovered. Errors found in the spelling of names in the pages of the REVIEW have been corrected in several cases. Where it was not possible to determine the identity of two individuals bearing the same given and family name these were indicated as separate entries. The various Indian tribes have been indexed under the general entry, Indians, but not under separate subject entries.

Within a given entry, grouping has been attempted so that all the reviews of one reviewer, all the books he has written, all the articles he has composed are arranged by groups in order of volume and page. For subject entries, too, the assembling of subject entries have offered problems of synthesis which often times have necessitated a compromise in phraseology.

Throughout, the compiler has tried to be specific rather than general; it has been her goal to supply an efficient tool for the scholar, the librarian, and the student. Only usage will tell in what measure she has achieved or fallen short in her attempt. In this complicated and, at times, tedious task she is appreciative of the assistance rendered by Miss Sarah Siegel during the earlier days of formulating policies and by Messrs. Hubert H. Hawkins and Arthur A. Polk in collating and proofreading. Credit is also due to Miss Elsie Reya for a careful typing of manuscript copy and to Mr. Edward F. Misak and the staff of The Torch Press for their prompt, efficient, and intelligent cooperation on problems of a typographical nature. Most of all, however, she is grateful for the patient advice and helpful suggestions of the managing editor, Dr. Arthur C. Cole. For any errors of commission or omission she alone assumes responsibility.
